

I feel the signals that would likely be radiated into the environment will be detrimental to other forms of communications, primarily radio. The amount of interference will probably not be known until the technology is implemented. I am also concerned about the possibility of signal "sniffing" on a system that could emanate signals into the air. This sort of intercepting would be completely undetectable in such a medium.